Poros March 25th, 1827

My Lord

I am happy to be able to inform you in answer to your letter of the morning, that things are brought to that state that the common of the parties is I think now effected. The deputies from Castri came over to me yesterday morning to Damala; there they met those of Egina; after some discussion they have come to the following conclusion which is ratified by the assembly of Egina will finally terminate the affair. The general assembly may meet immediately.

The place of reunion is to be at Epidaurus (where from it, continuing to Athens is not a bad selection).

The Assembly from Castri is to be considered a regular assembly, the president of that assembly to preside the ratification of the letter written by the ambassadors at Constantinople respecting the mediation. [1]

Another article respecting the Greeks generally who have taken at Argos for their County.

A proposition to nominate Count Capo d'Istria President (however such nomination should not be as agreable to England).

But my Lord are the articles proposed & this day I hope those are as seen from Egina possibly are ample. they are m… and if it had so happened that they were not moderate, common sense & the [] of their Country would induce the assembly at Egina to accept them. Both parties are wrong therefore the sooner concessions are made between them the more honourable for those who access to the proposals.

As soon as I receive the announcement from Egina I will let you Lordship know the result.

I remain
my Loid
yours very faithfully
R. Church
