Lord Cochrane would perhaps think it advisable to send a letter out by me addressed to the Executive body, informing them of his intentions, & requesting them to yield me every facility in making such preparations as his Lordship may intrust me with. Thus, I might select the Vessels the best adapted for fire Vessels, collect a quantity of large shells, prepare fuzes etc commence with an establishment at one of the islands, begin to build gun boats & make gun carriages - collect fuel of different descriptions &c &c

Perhaps Lord Cochrane would write a letter to Miaulis, the Greek Admiral, who is a very worthy old man. As Miaulis has written to L. C. it might be advisable to thank him for the offers of his services which cannot fail to move useful [01] to his country & honorable to himself.

The brothers Toombasis would doubtless feel highly honored if L. C. addressed a letter to them - it could not fail to attach them & their Ships (which are the best among the Greeks) to his service.

Nicolo Kalergy is the young man in England now- he belongs to a respectable family in Russia, possesses talent & probity, speaks various languages, but wants application.

Kakarofas is the name of the young man who is learning painting.

L. C. might perhaps think it useful to prepare a number of copies of a Proclamation to be distributed upon his arrival, announcing to the inhabitants the assistance he had brought them & exhorting them to make one great effort to destroy the Egyptian forces by land & then promising at the same time rewards to those who should distinguish themselves & that merit should henceforth be the only recommendation [02]
